Per our conversation when you were here with Scott Robinson:

In November of 2009 one of our employees (which happens to be the owners son in law) purchased a house that had been in foreclosure. The electric had been off to the house for some time and it had set empty. With no electricity to the sump pump the water had filled the finished basement up to about the 5-foot mark. All of the drywall and a lot of the studding in the basement was covered with mold. The drywall was all removed and some of the studding was replaced. We treated everything that was left with a mold inhibitor. A new heating & air system was installed and the ductwork in the basement was replaced (the ductwork to the 2nd floor was left in tact). We were concerned about the mold reoccurrence of the mold so we were looking for an air treatment product that would help prevent it. We came across the Guardian Air Phi Cell in our search and after doing some research decided to use it. It is now November 2, 2011 and we have had zero mold so far. We were so pleased with the performance of the Guardian Air we purchased a second one and installed it in the owners son's home when we installed his new heat pump on an a existing gas furnace.
